Energy Trust of Oregon board adds Anne Warrington Donnelly Coos Bay executive brings passion for economic, cultural vitality to the nonprofit

COOS BAY, Ore. — March 28, 2013 — Energy Trust of Oregon has added four new members to its board of directors, including Anne Warrington Donnelly of Coos Bay.

Donnelly is executive director of the Coos County Historical Society in Coos Bay, a 120-year-old private, nonprofit institution. Under Donnelly's direction, the organization is building a new facility, the Coos Historical and Maritime Museum. The new museum incorporates energy-saving features supported by Energy Trust. Donnelly's wide-ranging professional background includes land use planning, watershed management and trial law.

"We are privileged to engage Anne's expertise and passion for economic and cultural vitality in the South Coast and statewide," said John Reynolds, board president, Energy Trust.

In addition to Donnelly, others recently named to Energy Trust's board include Anne Haworth-Root, an entrepreneur and agribusiness leader from Medford; Mark Kendall, an energy consultancy owner from Salem; and Dave Slavensky, a manufacturer from Bend. Donnelly fills a position on the board recently vacated by Coos Bay restaurateur and civic leader Joe Benetti.

Drawn from communities around the state, Energy Trust directors represent a broad spectrum of expertise from the private sector and public institutions. Board members, all volunteers, provide strategic and policy direction for the nonprofit, which designs and delivers programs that help residential, commercial, industrial and agricultural customers save energy and generate renewable power. The 15-member board approves the organization's annual budget and major expenditures. Board members bring independent viewpoints to their oversight of Energy Trust, which invests in energy efficiency and renewable energy for the benefit of utility customers and operates under a grant agreement with the Oregon Public Utility Commission.

The Energy Trust board elected officers at its first meeting of 2013. Reynolds, a University of Oregon professor of architecture emeritus who lives in Eugene, was re-elected to a sixth one-year term as president. He has served on the Energy Trust board since the organization was established 11 years ago.

Debbie Kitchin, a Portland business owner, was elected to a second term as vice president. Alan Meyer, a Salem resident and director of energy management for Weyerhaeuser Company, was newly elected as secretary. Serving his second full term as treasurer is Dan Enloe, a Washington County resident and supply chain manager at Intel Corporation in Hillsboro.

Other members currently serving on Energy Trust's board include Rick Applegate, Applegate Consulting, Portland; Julie Brandis, Oregon State University Foundation, Corvallis; Ken Canon,

Canon and Hutton law firm, Myrtle Creek; Roger Hamilton, Western Grid Group, Eugene; and Jeff King, Northwest Power and Conservation Council (retired), Portland. Representatives from the OPUC and the Oregon Department of Energy serve as non-voting board members. Nine of the 13 voting board members are from outside the Portland region. All but three are employed in private sector enterprises.

All board meetings are open to the public. View board meeting dates, agendas and materials online at www.energytrust.org/About/public-meetings/BDMeetings.aspx.
